BOOKS

Books: 'The Wine Snob's Dictionary' Rare is the dictionary that entertains. But The Wine Snob's Dictionary is that rare exception.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 13, 2008 Books: 'Leather Maiden' If you've never entered the twisted world of novelist Joe R. Lansdale, 'Leather Maiden' is as good a point as any to strap it on.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2008 Books: 'Letters of Ted Hughes' Each of Ted Hughes' early words, each hurtle to the next word, each jarred angle between them, had the solidity of a crag, the cloud spray of a waterfall.

Best Book: Laurence Gonzales The Chicago-area writer expands on a mix of personal experience and recent scientific research in 'Everyday Survival: Why Smart People Do Stupid Things.'

Nobel literature winner, France's Le Clezio is little known in the U.S. For those Americans seeking great foreign authors who have yet to be discovered in English, the Nobel Prize judges present a fresh candidate: Jean-Marie Gustave Le Clezio, this year's winner of the literature prize.

Troubling new evidence leads local author to rewrite Titanic's final chapter Faulty design and a cover-up at the heart of Titanic's last great mystery.

Lori Andrews pours her genetics and legal expertise into 'Immunity' Writing thrillers is only a sideline for Lori Andrews, one of the country's leading experts on bioethics. The best-selling Chicago author discusses her latest page-turner in Seattle next week.
